Disciplined agile teams invest a bit of time up front in an Inception phase, which is sometimes called a project initiation phase, startup phase, sprint zero, or iteration zero. This effort is conducted before actually starting to build a solution. Your aim is to do just enough high-level work to get going in the right direction, the details will come during Construction.